I especially like the new Photoshop app that is now included in Lightroom. The Photoshop app (development version) has the same features as the Photoshop CS6 release that is included in the Lightroom 5. It has adjustments, image history, and an adjustment section. The adjustment section allows adjustments to be made at a specific point (frame). It is very convenient to make adjustments based on a specific point. It also allows to create a perspective correction for a specific section in the image. There is a "3D" view, where you can see your adjustments, perspective corrections and triangles in 2D. It is very convenient to move / rotate the correction. I know that Lightroom has adjustments, but it wasn't very easy to make the necessary adjustments and see them in 2D. I am not so good with the Photoshop application, especially with creating frames and adjusting the perspective, but I can still achieve the level of control that I need.
